The Peninsula Tokyo holds nearly 1,000 pieces of art created by 60 artists with 90% of them being Japanese. The Lobby features a unique concave chandelier designed by Tino Kwan, which has 1,313 crystal LED light bulbs and resembles a cloud of hanabi (fireworks) or hotaru (fire flies); and a bamboo dragon sculpture called 'Lying Dragon Gate' by Japanese designer Keisen Hama, representing strength, harmony & good fortune. The Void sculpture by Ben Jakober and Yannick Vu, situated in the centre of the hotel and viewable from each floor, is 13 metres long and 7 metres wide. It is comprised of 24 stainless steel cones, each weighing 80 kg. Kyoto Tsuruya is sister to the famous three Michelin Star Kyoto restaurant, which serves the 500 year-old kaiseki cuisine, regarded as one of the highest forms of traditional culinary art in Japan. The rooftop grill restaurant, Peter, is named after Mr Peter C Borer, COO of The Peninsula Hotels. Since 2009, The Peninsula Tokyo staff have made thousands of onigiri rice balls for a local orphanage. The Peninsula is the only hotel in Japan to illuminate its exterior in pink every October in recognition of Breast Cancer Awareness Month.
