DID YOU KNOW?

Steeped in over 300 years of heritage, Grantley Hall was built by Thomas Norton and his son Fletcher Norton, first Baron Grantley, in the 17th century, based on a Palladian design by English architect Isaac Ware. Over the years, the property became firmly established on the British country retreat scene, welcoming high profile guests including Queen Mary and the Princess Royal, prominent international businessmen, politicians and society families.

Grantley Hall's 1910 Japanese garden has been added to Historic England's National Heritage List, which includes 400,000 of England's most important places. Lady Jane Furness was a keen gardener, and she commissioned the installation of the Japanese garden - the first of its kind ever planted in England – around 1910. Formed by rocks brought across from the Brimham Rocks estate, the garden features two ponds linked by a stream with large, irregular stepping stones; diverse trees, mosses, ferns and bamboo; and Japanese stone lanterns, one of which can still be seen.

Shaun Rankin, the highly acclaimed Yorkshire-born chef, gained his first Michelin star in 2005. Rankin's London outposts include Ormer Mayfair at the prestigious Flemings Hotel and the launch of the restaurant at elite member's club 12 Hay Hill in 2005. Shaun has made numerous TV appearances including 2017 Masterchef UK when Ormer Mayfair was featured as a location for the programme. In 2009 he also represented the southwest in the fourth series of BBC Two's Great British Menu, as well as further appearances on ITV's Saturday Kitchen and Channel 4's Meet What You Eat. The chef also launched his first recipe book in 2011, 'Shaun Rankin's Seasoned Islands', including over 75 recipes inspired by the Channel Islands.
